Canadian Bioethics Society- Book Review

CBS Reviewer: Marla Sharp
Date of Published Review: July 2017

Review

Paediatric Patient and Family-Centred Care: Ethical and Legal Issues (2014) introduces readers to a collaborative approach to patient care that is quickly gaining acceptance and support across various levels of the healthcare spectrum—one in which members of the patient’s family are also recognized as care recipients, and thus care is planned around the entire family unit. This type of care requires healthcare teams to respect and respond to the specific needs, values, and desires of the patient and family and to ensure that these principles and factors have a functional role in all clinical decisions.

The text provides readers with a wide range of relevant and engaging works, written by knowledgeable Canadian experts from various fields, including bioethics, law, medicine, health policy, nursing, philosophy, and social work, among others. Sections and chapters are intuitively organized in such a way that facilitates a cohesive understanding, despite a relative lack of definitional unity across fields of practice compared to more traditional care models. This work provides an inclusive and enthusiastic approach to this topic, and its approach differs from that of other published works in the area of paediatric patient and family-centred care models insofar as it features significant discussion of both ethical and legal deliberations rather than one or the other. Furthermore, the authors’ frequent use of case studies makes for informed understanding of the contemporary, real-world benefits and challenges that arise when implementing variations of this type of care model.

Some of the most notable advantages of Patient and Family-Centred Care (P&FCC) approaches include greater patient and family satisfaction, better overall health outcomes, fewer lawsuits, and reductions in rehospitalizations and referrals to specialists. However, there remain some substantial issues, some of the most problematic pertaining to resource allocation, physician concerns about losing their role as primary healthcare providers and the practicality of involving family members in care planning, and difficulties determining who makes up the family unit. The articles within this text come together to provide a strong explanation and analysis of P&FCC in paediatric care settings; one that would be particularly useful for organizations or institutions (and for the professionals that work within them) that are interested in learning more about this care model when considering whether or not to implement it into their current care practices, or conversely, for those that may have already begun to implement these types of ‘synergistic’\(^5\) approaches to care and are seeking insight for optimization purposes.

---

2 Ibid.

Ethics Issues

- Patient-Physician Relationships/Conflict
- Vulnerable Populations (E.g. Healthcare Research, Minors)
- Resource Allocation
- Sensitization of Health Professionals (Training and Practice to Ethical Issues)

About the author: Marla Sharp is a current MPH candidate with a specialization in health policy at New York University. She holds a Masters degree in philosophy from McMaster University, where she completed her thesis, ‘The Self in Crisis: Using Self-Trust to Enhance Therapeutic Practices for Patients with Chronic Suicidal Ideation’. Her main areas of interest include psychiatric ethics and neuroethics, child and adolescent development, chronic disease, and how these matters relate to health policy.

---